UNITED NATIONS ORGANISATION

When you entered the gates of United Nations Headquarters, you stepped into international territory, land that (1) not just to one country, but to all countries who have joined the organization. Together these Member States have pledged to work to (2) international peace and security, promote self-determination and equal rights, and encourage economic and social well-being; together they speak for almost all the people in the world. So, WELCOME TO THE UNITED NATIONS. This is your organization. It represents your world.

As (3) was drawing to a close, the United Nations came into being with the signing of its Charter in San Francisco in 1945/ At that time 51 nations belonged to the Organization. Over the years the membership has grown to more than three times that number, with 159 Member States in 1991.

The United Nations met in several locations before the present site (4) in 1946 as its Permanent Headquarters. (5) of the location was made possible through a gift from John D. Rockefeller, Jr. The cornerstone for the Headquarters was laid on 24 October 1949 – United Nations Day – at an open-air meeting of the General Assembly; it was not until 1952, however, that meetings could actually take place in the General Assembly Hall itself.

The buildings were designed by an international team of architects, headed by Wallace R. Harrison of the United States.

The site is regarded as an international zone under an agreement with the United States, it enjoys special privileges and immunities. It has its own fire and security forces as well as its own US Government post office branch.
